Health 3.0: Be the hero of your own medical journey

Greetings!

According to Dr. Venu Julapalli, gastroenterologist and favorite among BRI speakers, healthcare is undergoing transitions and evolutions, just like many other areas of life.

From Health 1.0 to Health 2.0 and now into Health 3.0, Dr. Julapalli describes each healthcare phase, and how doctors can take the best attributes of each phase and move it forward into Health 3.0--the best of all worlds.

Be the hero of your own medical journey!

Dr. Julapalli stresses that there is a unique synergy between unique, individual medical practices and styles, that can be successfully combined with modern technology and systems to create a truly powerful healthcare model that sustains, supports, and empowers the patient-doctor relationship.

Dr. Julapalli has also written extensively on Health 3.0. To read more, there are several articles on Medium.com.

Next Generation Medicine with a generous donation.

Did you know that BRI is the only non-profit organization in America that works primarily with med- and pre-med students on free market healthcare policy?

Next Generation Medicine was produced by BRI interns. It is a podcast by med students for med students, educating and enlightening them about free market healthcare.

Did you also know that medical students overwhelmingly do not receive free market healthcare policy instruction in their schools? Without a variety of channels to funnel information to them, most will graduate with a nasty surprise in store: the inability to practice medicine in freedom.

Help keep BRI's podcast project going today with a generous donation.

Nigeria to PA: One BRI med student's experience

Chidimma O. Ezeilo, a BRI chapter member and final year medical student at University College Hospital in Ibadan, Nigeria shared with us her 4-week clinical experience at Penn-State Medical Center in Hershey, PA. BRI is proud of our international chapter students and their determination not only to be excellent doctors, but to share what they learn wherever they study and bring it back to the betterment of their own country's healthcare system.
