Giving Tuesday is November 28th. BRI would be honored to receive part of your charitable giving this year.

Greetings!

Yes, it's that time of year again, when we turn their thoughts to sharing goodwill and abundance, especially with those whose values we cherish.

At BRI, we hope that we hold the value of preserving the patient-doctor relationship with you. We work for this every day, sharing our knowledge and spreading the word with medical students and the public via events, collaborating with like-minded organizations, posting to social media and on BRI's blog.

In fact, I recently published an article on whether Medicare-For-All really is more efficient than free market healthcare, and if "efficiency" is even the right metric to use. BRI student leaders also have leveraged their conference and event attendance into deep understanding that will help propel them into their medical futures. Please read their blog posts, too!

This is the kind of informative reasoning that supporters like you make possible. It is only through thoughtful, truthful, and honest discussion that we can move healthcare freedom forward.

We would be honored to receive a part of your charitable giving this year to help BRI continue this work. A perfect time to help us is on Giving Tuesday, Nov. 28th--the first Tuesday following Thanksgiving.

We hope you find the information BRI provides valuable and inspiring, But more importantly, healthcare affects us all, and BRI is here--educating, informing and enlightening the next generation of doctors in optimal healthcare policy approaches.

BRI relies on yearly student memberships and general supporter donations to stay in this long--often frustrating--fight for healthcare freedom. We must not give up. Doctors and their patients are relying on us to get it right.

Every time I hear from one more student who has been inspired by free market healthcare possibilities, I choose to keep rallying on. Thank you for helping us continue our vital work.

In partnership,

Beth Haynes, MD
Medical Director
